“ I loved Anne’s laugh. Infectious. Deep. Real. I have such fond memories of her at Zack and Molly’s wedding. She was a dancing fool. Something I didn’t know about her. She tore it up on the dance floor with joy and abandon! She is now dancing and laughing and watching over those she loves.

“ I haven't been the closest to my aunt Anne in recent years-- well, over a decade unfortunately; but I still have vivid memories of her babysitting me as a kid. Memories that hopefully stand the test of time and stick with me through my journey through the long road ahead of me. I still keep in possession the stone Vince Lombardi football trophy that she gifted me when I was around four years old, and I remember her amusement at my early aspirations of becoming a landscaper when I was older. The latter ultimately didn't come to be, and ultimately one thing that I've learned and we've all experienced first hand is that this life we live is full of changes and uncertainty for better or for worse. I love you and I'll miss you regardless of our mutually lost touch, and I hope we'll meet again in another life. My deepest condolences to the Altobelli and Duley families, immediate and extended.

“ I could share so many memories and you would probably be mad at me for doing so. It's a sister thing! We kept this a secret for reasons we both know why. I convinced you to go trick or treating when I was in my twenties and you being ten years older just went along and we hit the Detroit streets and laughed all the way. Your witch hat flew off and a lady giving us candy thought we were nuts! I even had a beer in my pocket. We kept trying to bribe Andy not to tell people what we did. God, I miss those days...I wish all of us were together sitting around and laughing at our mischief. I miss my family. I want to go back and never let anything come between us.

“ Like time suspended, a wound unmended~you and I.
We had no ending, no said good-bye.
For all my life, I'll wonder why.
Surrounded by family, I still feel alone. My heart is so empty. This pain I must own.
I wish I could hug you and just see your face, but now I have memories to stand in your place.
