“ I remember being a bit intimidated arriving at my first police Christmas party in a poofy 90s navy blue dress. Beverly put me right at ease paying me one of the best compliments I ever received.

I am so sorry for you and your family Dave. Marcy Kuehn

“ My favorite Beverly Rowe story is the one about her bout with the IRS over a perceived underpayment of taxes by one of her clients. Two intimidating agents showed up at her doorstep expecting to overwhelm her with their "evidence". After explaining to them that they were wrong in their assessment in less than polite language, she answered each of their questions and produced receipts over several days of investigation. The underpayment began to shrink from the multi-thousands of dollars little by little until their every question was answered and each receipt was tallied. After their exhaustive search for the extra tax dollars the agents found that they had met their match and found that their calculations had been reduced to an underpayment of ten cents which they offered to overlook. Beverly said that if ten cents was owed, ten cents would be paid and she wrote the treasury a check for ten cents and told them that it better be cashed because she didn't want her balance to be messed up. In parting, the agents asked for her client list so they "wouldn't have to bother her again". She told them to figure it out for themselves. Even the IRS learned that you don't mess with Beverly Rowe and get away with a whole skin. Is it wrong to want to laugh a little while I cry?
