“ She always told me that we had a special bond because we were the black sheep of the family. I know in my case it was true and she was a rebel in her own way. I loved her for her kindness towards me and when my late wife passed away she called me at least once a week for almost two years until I had moved on to check on me. You don't know what that meant to me. She requested that I do an oil painting of the little cabin for her which kept my mind occupied with something besides reliving my wife's final hours. She helped me through one of the most devastating times of my life and I will always treasure my memories of her. The last time I saw her was at the little cabin during a family reunion. I'm glad that I will always picture her that way. Rest in peace to my black sheep cousin.
