“ JiAnn was my little sister. Fourteen years after me, JoAnn came along, the wild hair of the family. She lived life on her own terms and more often as not those around her lived on her own terms too. City life was not her choice. With her partner Joe and their son Dustin, they found their country home. Chopping wood for winter heat, wild roosters, her critters and the freedom of the country were some of the tales she shared with me. She survived cancer about ten years ago only to have it hunt her down again. It had spread too far and the complications were too much for successful treatment. She set her own terms into motion for the last time. She wanted out of the hospital and to go home and listen to her birds, she didn't want to die with the last name of a failed marriage, she wanted to marry her partner of almost thirty years and she wanted the love and attention of her husband, son, family and friends. She knew it was the end and she felt she was comfortable in the hands of God and was just trying to figure it all out. Near the end, her husband told her, when the angels come for her, don't fight them, let them take you. She passed at home, with her Orioles just outside her country window, she had her new name, JoAnn Kinsman, she was surrounded by her husband, son, family and friends. The women of the families stepped up and took control of her care and comfort as she left this life and I am forever grateful for that care.

Rest in peace, Sister ❤️💔❤️
