Joe was a man who lived for family—he was the glue that held everyone together. A true free spirit, he loved to travel, never hesitating to pack a bag and "hit the road". He was a veteran who served his country during the Vietnam War, a devoted father and grandfather who lit up every sideline cheering on his children and grandchildren, and a man whose bright sky-blue eyes and radiant smile left an unforgettable mark on everyone who knew him.

From his hippie soul to his generous heart, Joe was loved by many and loved even harder in return. His family will forever remember his adventurous spirit, his unwavering encouragement, and his famous words: "I lived my life my way—and it was a good one."

As Joe would often remind us all:

"Do everything with love."
