LN

Kent was a perfectionist. He was an extremely skilled mechanic. While we lived in Eastpointe, near his house, we used to stop by several times a week

We would walk back to his meticulously organized garage and laugh and talk and hand him tools while he fine tuned cars and other projects. When he finished working on something, it was perfect. He was a different kind of man, but I liked and respected him. He lived his life as he chose.

“ Kent and I spent many, many hours and days together pondering and figuring out ways to fix the world. I'll cherish the memories of my friend Kent always. Whenever we went anywhere and dealt with people unknown to us they always thought we were brothers, same age and did look quite a bit alike.

I know that Kent is looking down on us all with a 12oz Coke Classic in one hand and a cigarette in the other shaking his head and wondering just what the 'hell' we think we're doing. I mean after all Kent always knew a better way.

The world will be a little bit at a loss for my friend Kent having left but he absolutely left his impression on many of us.

My Friend Kent will be sadly missed...
