“ *Where to begin, I've known my uncle rich my whole life. He was one of a kind, there was no one else quite like him. He was loud and obnoxious but that was him. Not hearing his voice carry through the house is probably what I'm missing most. He was like a second father to me. He was there for me through my first heartbreak and for so many other things. He gave me my first set of stitches, on accident of course. I was somewhere between 5-7 years old. I jumped at him out of nowhere and he caught me and lifted me up in the air, unfortunately there was a ceiling fan there lol. He felt awful. But I hugged him and told him that it was ok and I still loved him. I literally have a scar to remember him by. You will be forever missed uncle rich. My heart aches.
Love, your favorite niece❤️*
