“ The best memory I have of Billy was the day he married my long time friend Dorothy.
Those were the good old days.. I have a saddened heart for Dorothy and Jayme.
RIP Billy. Hang in there Dorothy & Jayme. Lean on your friends. We will be here for you.
Love you both.. Karen D.

“ Regarding my friend Bill Nilsen, who left this world a few weeks ago...

At the time Bill left this world, God was still at work in his life . . . and he didn't even realize it. -

While Bill tried hard for the past year or so to tell everyone around him that he no longer believed in God or Heaven, deep inside I knew better. -

Ya see, the last time I was in his home visiting, I noticed that on his kitchen table he still had a large hard-cover Bible. And still on his coffee table next to his sofa was a small pocket New Testament. So while Bill battled deep depression, God was still there trying to reach him. -

Now, even though Bill told me on that last day that I was with him that he was looking forward to burning in hell, I knew better. -

If we can understand that depression is a serious illness, then we have to believe that God was never far from Bill's thoughts. So while he tried hard to put on the tough-guy image for everyone around him, I knew better. -

He told me some time back that he didn't want to hear me mention God or Church to him. But again I knew better. I simply told him that he can rest assured that I would comply with his wishes and not bring the subject up . . . but I also told him that I would never stop praying for him. He said that was OK. -

Depression is a serious illness. Alcoholism and nicotine are serious addictions that are extremely hard to break. I know a thing or two about depression and addiction as I have also battled these in the past. So in my mind, even though Bill believed that he turned his back on God, I'm not so sure. None of us can know what was in his mind during those last few moments of consciousness. - So will we see Bill in the Kingdom when we get there? . . . I like to think so.
